Environmental Scanning

• During our April 1 call we discussed COVID-19, and the impact on our organization’s diversity initiatives and underrepresented law student and lawyers. Members that are involved in planning summer diversity interview programs shared that they are discussing whether to move forward, postpone, or hold virtual interview programs. One employer member commented that they would be hesitant about participating if the diversity interview programs are transitioned online instead of in-person. Some school members have noticed that underrepresented students have not been as engaged during the school zoom town halls. I shared that I will be hosting a zoom session specifically for diverse students at my school in hopes that they will be more inclined to participate in a smaller, more casual zoom meeting that doesn’t include the whole student body and administration. Other members expressed interest in doing the same at their organizations. Members shared different outreach they are doing with their diverse attorneys, including weekly email newsletters that highlight NALP resources and provide information on best practices, wellness, and inclusion. Staying connected is also a big focus, with members organizing virtual coffee chats, happy hours, and fireside chats with the DE&I professional. We also shared personal tips for managing stress and working remotely.

Section Calls

The section’s 2020-2021 kick-off call was held on May 6. The call was attended by several new section members who contacted me after the call to indicate how much they enjoyed the call. I briefly reviewed the DEI work groups and encouraged section members to volunteer to serve as vice chairs or work group volunteers. Several section members volunteered in advance of the call. Catherine Clement provided the group with a board update. Finally, we shared important tips/lessons learned while working remotely.

Our first quarterly section call was held via WebEx on June 10. In recognition of the killings of Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor and George Floyd and the recent protests and unrest, I began the meeting with a period of silence to allow members to reflect. Beth Moeller shared that NALP would be issuing a Statement and Call to Action reconfirming its commitment to greater diversity, equity, and inclusion in the legal profession. Annabrooke Temple led the discussion on topics to be proposed for Bulletin articles (6/15/20 DEI Bulletin proposal submission attached) and AEC presentations. Finally, I shared the difficulties that I have been experiencing recently, both personally and professionally, as a Black female, the mother of a 22-year-old son and as a D&I professional and then opened the floor for others to share. It was an emotional and powerful discussion. Several section members stayed on the WebEx call for more than 30 minutes after the meeting ended to continue the discussion.
